Travels and Adventures

After graduating from college, Helen embarked on a series of adventures that would shape the course of her life. In 1913, she traveled to Alaska with her father, where she witnessed the beauty of the wilderness and developed a deep appreciation for the outdoors. In the years that followed, she explored other remote regions, including the Canadian Rockies, the Amazon rainforest, and the African savanna.

Helen's travels were often challenging and dangerous. She faced harsh weather conditions, encountered wildlife, and navigated unfamiliar cultures. However, she never allowed these obstacles to deter her. Her determination and resilience inspired her fellow travelers and earned her the respect of the local people she met along the way.

"Itchy Feet"

In 1923, Helen published her first book, "Itchy Feet," a collection of essays chronicling her travels and adventures. The book was an instant success, capturing the imagination of readers with its vivid descriptions, witty observations, and inspiring stories. "Itchy Feet" became a beloved classic of travel literature and has continued to inspire generations of travelers.

The book's title perfectly encapsulated Helen's restless spirit and her insatiable desire to explore. She wrote: "I have never been able to resist the call of the open road. There is something in the lure of the unknown that sets my feet itching to be off."

Writing Style and Legacy

Helen Stein Behr's writing style was characterized by its honesty, humor, and passion. She had a gift for capturing the essence of her experiences and sharing them with her readers in a way that was both entertaining and thought-provoking. Her writing inspired countless people to embrace their own adventurous spirit and to seek out new experiences.

Helen Stein Behr's legacy extends beyond her writing. She was a pioneer for women in exploration and helped to pave the way for future generations of female adventurers. Her work continues to inspire people around the world to step outside of their comfort zones and to explore the world with an open heart and mind.

Later Years and Death

In her later years, Helen Stein Behr continued to write and to travel. She wrote several more books, including "Around the World with Auntie Mame" and "A Traveler's Bedside Reader." She also established the Helen Stein Behr Foundation, which supports travel and education for women.

Helen Stein Behr died in 1982 at the age of 93. She left behind a legacy of adventure, inspiration, and writing that continues to touch the lives of people around the world.
